Five new design destinations around the country share a sophisticated aesthetic and a passion for uncovering unique finds

By Jessica Romm

Lime Stone: Healdsburg, CA

In Sonoma County, Lisa Palmer stocks exquisite tableware, rustic furniture, lighting, and accessories. And for those who entertain alfresco, there are shatterproof wineglasses, which husband Charlie Palmer also uses at his restaurant next door, Dry Creek Kitchen.

Ruby Beets Old & New: Sag Harbor, NY

In this intimate space, owners Sharone Einhorn and Honey Wolters pull off the same enchanting pairings that made their former Bridgehampton shop a destination for everything from a rusty 1920s étagère to Edwardian settees. The difference here? It's not all old. Among the contemporary items for sale are upholstery by the U.K.'s George Sherlock, painterly Iksel wallpaper panels, and Murano glass that conjures the colors of the sea.

York Street Studio: New Preston, CT

Decorators like Michael S. Smith and Jeffrey Bilhuber have been snatching up sleek leather barstools and mahogany desks from York Street's Connecticut showroom for years. Now, this insider resource has opened its first retail shop—in the style of a rustic country store—so everyone can buy the design firm's handcrafted lamps, wood and leather furnishings, and unique hardware.

Russell+Hazel: Minneapolis, MN

Organize in style with fashionable desk accessories and Lucite Rolodexes from this trendsetting stationer. The collection changes seasonally, and the current assortment includes fleur-de-lis and pink brocade storage boxes.

Adesso Eclectic Imports: Pasadena, CA

The 30-foot-long 1920s kayak hanging on a wall sets an eclectic tone for this store, housed in a former horse stable. The owners offer architectural-salvage pieces like marble columns, as well as vintage designs by Jean-Michel Frank and Jansen.
